A World Connected by Listening and Telling Personal Stories

For the past 25 years, Murray Nossel, PhD, has traveled the world, performing his own personal stories and teaching others to tell theirs.

On Wednesday, March 12th, he will share stories of his ethnographic work with groups from Kenya to Kyrgystan.

He will also introduce the audience to some basic principles from his listening and storytelling method, demonstrating how these are applied at the Department of Narrative Medicine at Columbia University where he serves on the teaching faculty.
